April is Second Chance Month, a month to celebrate and raise awareness of justice-involved people and the work reentry organizations like TRI do to support second chances.

Many of our members share similar backgrounds: adverse childhood mental health issues and substance abuse.

Understanding these challenges, TRI has sought to address the needs of the whole person through our programming. Today, TRI provides comprehensive wraparound support and therapeutic services to members in one spot, reducing barriers to care and restoring dignity and respect to the reentry process.

Yet, our work continues. People are released into communities that are ill-prepared to welcome them and that perpetuate their stigmatization as formerly incarcerated individuals.

During our recent Fireside Chats, we dove into these challenges and shared our strategic plan to continue addressing members’ needs and reducing barriers to stability and self-sufficiency.

If you missed this important update, keep an eye out for the Fireside Chat recording in a separate email. You can read more about the four pillars of TRI's strategic plan here and below.

What we call people matters. People who are impacted by these [criminal justice] systems deserve the dignity that they are too often denied. We can show them respect by using language that centers their personhood and asserts their humanity. - Vera
